Chicago may be the Toddlin' Town but New York is the spooky one

A self-proclaimed ghost-hunter says New York City has some of the most haunted places in the world. Kate Davey - who does research for an Internet company - says places where people hang out everyday of the week, have a lot of paranormal activity.

She says Washington Square Park in Greenwich Village was a public hanging square in the 18th century - and a lot of spirits roam among the college students, tourists and New Yorkers who hang out there.

Davey adds that New York City's history dating back to the 1600s makes it a perfect environment for unrested souls. She says dozens of restaurants and other public places have paranormal activity, including one Greenwich Village restaurant - where the maitre D' quit because he was pushed down the stairs by something he couldn't see.

About

Oldster's View is intended to be a news aggregation site which presents the more unusual or just timely news items. No blood or gore or car accidents or fires or cameras stuck in the face of grieving parents or any of the other "news" that your TV proudly presents. There will be some occasional tech stuff but mostly just general interest items. Enjoy.

NOTE: I make no representation as to the accuracy or truthfulness of anything on this site. I am simply passing on things I have found. Use your own judgement.
